

The Country Lassie.

She blossomed in the country,
Where sunny summer dings
Her rosy arm around the earth,
And brightest blossoms bring;
Health was her sole inheritance,
And she was never ill;
I never dreamed the wild-wood
Contained so sweet a flower.

Far distant from the city,
And inland from the sea,
My love blossomed in goodness,
As pure as pure could be.
She caught her dewy freshness
From hill and mountain bower;
I never dreamed the wild-wood
Contained so sweet a flower.

The rainbow must have lent her
Some of its airy grace;
The wild rose parted with a blush,
That nestled on her face;
The sunbeams got entangled in
The long waves of her hair,
Or she had never grown to be
So modest and so fair.

The early birds have taught her
Their joyous main song;
And some of their soft innocence,
She's been with them so long;
And for her now, I needs be,
I part with wealth and power—
I never dreamed the wild-wood
Contained so sweet a flower.

Consider Me Smith.

There is a very good story in the papers of the day, which was played by Dr. Caldwell, formerly of the University of North Carolina.

The old doctor was a small man, and lean, but as hard and angular as the most irregular tough, but he did not seem strong. Nevertheless, he was among the knowing ones reputed to be as agile as a cat, and in addition was by no means deficient in knowledge of the "noble science of self-defence." Besides, he was as cool as a cucumber. Well, in the freshman class of a certain year was a burly beef mountaineer of eighteen or nineteen. This genius conceived a great contempt for old Bolus' physical dimensions, and his soul was horrified that one so deficient in muscle should be so potential in his rule.

Poor Jones—that's what we'll call him—had no idea of moral force. At any rate he was not inclined to knock under, and he controlled despotically by a man that he imagined he could tie and whip. He at length determined to give the gentlemen a genteel private thrashing, some night in the College Campus, pretending to mistake him for some fellow student.

Shortly after, on a dark and rainy night, Jones met the doctor crossing the Campus. Walking up to him abruptly.

"Hellow, Smith! you rascal—is this you?" And with that he struck the old gentleman a blow on the side of the face that had nearly felled him.

Old Bolus said nothing but squared himself, and at it went. Jones' youth, weight and muscle, made him an "ugly customer," but after a round or two, the doctor's science began to tell, and in a short time he had knocked his beefy antagonist down, and straddle of his chest, with one hand on his throat, and the other dealing vigorous cuffs on the other side of his head.

"Ah stop! I beg pardon doctor! Caldwell—a mistake—for heaven's sake doctor!" growled Jones, who would thought he was about to be eaten up. "I—I really thought it was Smith?"

The Doctor replied with a word and a blow alternately—

"It makes no difference, for all present purposes consider me Smith!"

And, it is said, that old Bolus gave Jones such a pounding, then and there, as probably prevented his ever making another mistake as to personal identity at least on the College Campus.

Sleep of Plants.

Plants sleep as well as animals, the attitude that some of these assume on the approach of night, is extremely interesting to those who delight to study the beautiful phenomena of vegetable life. Some plants exhibit signs of sleep more marked than others. The leaves of clover, lucerne, and other plants close as the sun approaches the horizon; and in the honey locust this characteristic is particularly striking and beautiful. The delicately formed leaves close at nightfall in pairs, and remain so until the rising of the sun in the morning, when they gradually expand to their fullest extent. It is in common garden chickweed (Stellaria media) that the most perfect exemplification of the conjugal love and parental care of plants is observed. At the approach of night the leaves of this delicate plant, which are in pairs, begin to close towards each other, and when the sleeping attitude is completed these folded leaves embrace within their upper surfaces, the tender rudiments of the young shoots, and the uppermost pair but one at the end of the stalk, are furnished with longer leaf-stalks than the others, so that they can close upon the terminating pair and protect the end of the shoot.

Wherever there is authority, there is a natural inclination to disobedience. It was so with our first parents, and it has ever been so with all descendants. It is a part of the legacy we inherit from Adam.

I do not inquire how much you have read and studied on the human powers; but I ask how you exert those powers.—Chapin.

Nature is pattern maid-of-all-work, and does best when least meddled with.—She knows her work, and does it, if let alone.
